Moray, T. Henry: The Radiant Energy Device

T. H. Moray built a device capable of producing 50,000 watts of energy, if rebuilt, will be capable of answering the world's needs with a non-polluting form of energy. We have many of Moray's notes. Moray had completed his work. The evidence is overwhelming that he produced useful kilowatts of electrical power. The size of a Radiant-Energy unit will be capable of delivering 60 kilowatts and will be about 42 inch by 26 inch by 22 inch and weighing no more than 60 pounds.

Accelerated Decay Energy Converter \(ADEC\)

Gerardo International, Inc. A system for making use of stimulated radioactive decay toward the direct extraction of electrical energy. ... ADEC does not change the mechanism of spontaneous radioactive decay, it changes the probability of which atoms will undergo decay and when the decay will occur. As atoms exhibit no statistical memory, the event of a neighboring atom's spontaneous decay in no way influence the likelihood or unlikelihood of decay of a selected atom. As the extraction of power from the nuclear material is accelerated, the material's natural emissive lifetime will be exhausted in direct relation.

Carroll, Sean: Homepage: Theories on Gravity

Sean Carroll's Homepage. My research interests include cosmology, gravitation and field theory. For details you can look at some papers. Among his current projects is one on the collapse of cosmological textures, being done in collaboration with Andrew Sornborger and Ted Pyne. We have produced some plots of energy densities and quadrupole moments, as well as some pretty flashy movies. I've also been working on using triangles to quantize 2-dimensional Euclidean gravity, with Miguel Ortiz and Wati Taylor. The first three papers are now in the public domain: Paper One deals with some general formalism, while Paper Two applies it all to the Ising model coupled to gravity (or the "c=1/2 string", as we cognoscenti say). The recent and exciting Paper Three considers the Ising model with a boundary magnetic field, and computes the magnetization on the boundary and in the bulk. A paper with Ted Pyne on gravitational perturbations of the microwave background is now finished. He is at the Center for Theoretical Physics, MIT.

CETI: Clean Energy Technologies, Inc.

Clean Energy Technologies, Inc. (CETI) is a Dallas-based company that was formed in 1995 to further the research process related to the discovery of an new source of hydrogen energy. The company's patented technology uses ordinary water as fuel, highly specialized metal coated microspheres, and an electrolytic cell, called the Patterson Power Cell[®], which has demonstrated the ability to produce commercially viable levels of heat with complete reliability. The company has named the excess heat producing phenomenon the "CETI Reaction," until a more complete scientific understanding exists. Preliminary research reveals that the company's power generation device is environmentally safe, producing no harmful by-products. The flow system has been under development for more than five years, and incorporates advanced polymer chemistry and thin-film electro-plating methods. CETI currently has several U.S. patents that cover the entire technology. In addition, CETI has the rights to other related technologies in the field. All of the company's research is privately funded.

CETI believes this device will provide new direction in the area of nuclear physics, yielding new reaction pathways that will open the door to a technological revolution as never before imagined.

On the occasion of the 100th anniversary of Josef Loschmidt's death: Is Loschmidt's greatest discovery still waiting for its discovery? In 1868 J.C. Maxwell proved that a perpetual motion machine of the second kind would become possible, if the equilibrium temperature in a vertical column of gas subject to gravity were a function of height. However, Maxwell had claimed that the temperature had to be the same at all points of the column. So did Boltzmann. Their opponent was Loschmidt: who claimed that the equilibrium temperature declined with height, and that a perpetual motion machine of the second kind operating by means of such column was compatible with the second law of thermodynamics (and hence with the entropy theorem). Thus he was convinced he had detected a never ending source of usable energy for mankind.

Finsrud's PMM \(Perpetual Motion Machine\)

This is a very short summary on the PMM of Mr. Reidar Finsrud in Skaarer, Norway. Mr. Finsrud is a painter and makes sculptures, an artist. He started the design of his PMM, or as he says, his 'moving sculpture' or 'sculpture' twelve (12) years ago...The whole machine is placed inside a glass mount, to prevent visitors who view the machine in the gallery from touching it. All the parts and the internal workings of the device are clearly visible in a video made by the Norwegian channel 2 (TV 2). This is well below Dr. Hal Puthoffs' '1 Watt Challenge'. BUT, the total ENERGY that the device has already produced is $E_{tot} = P * t$, taking $t = 1$ month, $E_{tot} = 0.16 * 2\,592\,000\text{ s} = 414\,720$ Joules. This is a VERY large amount of energy. There will be more info available in the near future.

Hyperdimensional Physics

A theory of energy conversion using 3-D platonic solids on a planetary scale, based up several observations, including Richard Hoagland's studies of photographs of the Cydonia region on Mars, and the so-called pyramids on Mars. Tetrahedral physics is explained. The vertices of a tetrahedron inside a sphere will rest at 19.5 degrees North or South latitude at 120 degree intervals around the sphere. Rotating this sphere at a high rate of speed (may) cause something strange to occur. "You get an upwelling of energy from within the sphere seemingly coming from nowhere that produces different [visual] effects depending on what your sphere is made up of. Hoagland thinks that this energy is "stored" in a higher dimension than ours (mathematicians currently accept that there may be as much as 27 other higher dimensions) and that this energy "cascades" down and emerges into our dimension at the 19.5 degree latitude on rotating, spherical, liquid bodies - planets!! More examples of hyperdimensional physics can be found throughout our solar system and are detailed on the Planetary Anomalies page." Includes links to related subjects and areas.

Inert Gases - Jon Fox (& Hilarion)

Jon Fox's Web Site on Inert Gasses (with data from Hilarion). By exposing compressed inert gases to magnetic and electric stimulation, biological effects have been observed. Some background and review of the subject is presented, and case histories described briefly. Also, see the Inert Gas Devices F.A.Q. He touches a little bit of the conventional science about inert gases and what we have known about them for many years. And then discusses how he came to work with these things and the interesting effects that they produce. He discusses some unconventional science about the aether, and the relationship between inert gases, the aether and the aetheric body. He discusses the engineering part: the physical construction of the devices, and how he's been using them. Also included: some interesting case studies and information on how inert gases have been working with people over the years. Also, brief responses to a few questions that have been asked are included.

This paper is a review of the problem of the observable action of gravitational forces on charged particles, by Nils Rognerud. Discusses the induced electric fields and sometimes overlooked unique physical properties. Analyses several experiments, showing Gravity Shielding through Superconductivity: Recent gravity shielding experiments at Tampere University in Finland may shed some light on the theories of electrogravity. Tests show a small drop in the weight of objects placed over a special cryogenic device, as if it were shielding the object from the effects of gravity - an effect deemed impossible by most scientists. We thought it might be a mistake, Dr Podkletnov said, but we have taken every precaution. Yet the bizarre effects persisted. And other interesting information and web site links.

Society for Scientific Exploration \(SSE\)

The primary goal of the SSE is to provide a professional forum for presentations, criticism, and debate concerning topics which are for various reasons ignored or studied inadequately within mainstream science. A secondary goal is to promote improved understanding of those factors that unnecessarily limit the scope of scientific inquiry, such as sociological constraints, restrictive world views, hidden theoretical assumptions, and the temptation to convert prevailing theory into prevailing dogma. Topics under investigation cover a wide spectrum. At one end are apparent anomalies in well established disciplines. At the other, we find paradoxical phenomena that belong to no established discipline and therefore may offer the greatest potential for scientific advance and the expansion of human knowledge.

John Bedini has demonstrated an inexpensive, cigar-box sized Tesla-type converter which he had recently built (for a conference). Throughout the demonstration, which lasted a full 24 hours during the symposium, a constant load was being drawn out of the system to do work. Nevertheless, the converter kept the nickel-cadmium batteries fully charged! The concept, which had been originated by Nikola Tesla, was given to John Bedini by Ronald Brandt, who was a personal friend of Nikola Tesla. Brandt is reputed to have a similar converter which he has used for years without losing the battery charge. Bedini presented the schematic diagram showing how to build the solid-state device, and then released copies of the schematic diagram. Here it all is!

THE EMPIRE STRIKES BACK

BY ERIK BAARD

Alternative-Energy Scientist Fights to Save Patent

Dr. Randell Mills's physics and chemistry laboratories may have strangely united three forces that were presumed distinct: the U.S. Patent and Trademark office, the Department of State, and the American Physical Society. Unfortunately for Mills, they appear to have united against him.

This is a case for patent-dependent Nasdaq hopefuls and their investors to watch.

Mills, a Harvard-trained medical doctor and founder of the New Jersey-based technology start-up BlackLight Power Inc., was awarded a U.S. patent February 15 covering his claim to producing energy by shrinking the electron orbit of hydrogen below what most quantum theorists have thought possible for a century. He calls the smaller hydrogen atom a "hydrino" and theorizes it could lead to a nearly limitless supply of clean, cheap power (see "Quantum Leap" and "Doctor Molecool."

The news outraged Mills's fiercest critic, Dr. Robert Park, an APS spokesman and avid debunker based in Washington, D.C. Park mocked the patent decision in the press and in his What's New column at aps.org. The column comes with a disclaimer that states, "Opinions are the author's and are not necessarily shared by the APS, but they should be."

Within days, the patent office pulled back a related chemistry patent for further review just before issuance, citing comments by Park and others—none of whom has tested Mills's devices or materials—in mainstream press reports that Mills must be either wildly mistaken or a fraud. That patent application, number 09/009,294, was so near issuance that it slipped out in the PTO's weekly Gazette of allowances as Patent No. 6,030,601.

Mills says Park may have more than the safeguarding of science at heart. "Park's group is lobbying the government to give them billions of dollars for 'big science' projects that BlackLight's success would make obsolete. He's a competitor," says Mills, who is privately funded. "I know it's not completely analogous, but going to him would be like the patent office going to Bill Gates and asking, 'Do you think Apple's new operating platform will work?'"

With the novel hydrino chemistry, Mills says he's developed and had outside testing of the prototype for what could be a vastly superior class of batteries. He also claims to have developed compounds for plastic magnetic storage media and rustproof coatings, also with many independent lab verifications.

Mills's lawyers won an agreement from the patent office not to act on the chemistry application until June while the U.S. District Court examines the case. Meanwhile, Mills continues to take a beating at the agency, which took his artificial-intelligence patent application away from an examiner who'd been reviewing it for over a year and placed it in the hands of another, who quickly rejected it. The office also rejected his patent application for a hydrino power plant. Mills says he'll contest both decisions.

The 69-year-old Park and 42-year-old Mills have never met, but Park has blasted Mills since he proposed his theory nine years ago. In March, Mills's lawyers warned Park and three other scientists to refrain from calling him a fraud, even if they continue to denounce his theories. "Scientific debate is sacred—no one wants to silence that," Mills says. "But when you try to incriminate a business, you've crossed the line. Still, in a way I'm glad about this. It forces the issue. Now we'll have to put up or shut up, and they'll have to confront the data or fold." Mills says he's going to back up his filings with the patent office with more than 40 reports and publications, and he may request that the National Institute of Science and Technology test his prototype technologies.

Park says he doesn't know where Mills is on what he calls "the road from foolishness to fraud," because "the human capacity for self-deception should never be underestimated." Of course, he offers, even with a crank theory "there's room for serendipity, but I wouldn't bet on it."

Threats to the hydrino patents could jeopardize Morgan Stanley Dean Witter's plans to underwrite BlackLight's estimated billion dollar initial public offering. And some of BlackLight's backers say they're offended when portrayed as dupes or coconspirators.

"If I wanted to gamble, I'd fly to Vegas," says Rick Barry, whose Eastbourne Capital Management and its principals invested $5 million in BlackLight after what he describes as "detailed" due diligence by him and PacifiCorp. "I don't think the risk [with Mills] is science fraud. It's can he engineer a device and can he protect his intellectual property? I thought we were safe on the latter until this started to unfold."

Along with PacifiCorp, electric utility Conectiv has invested in BlackLight. Tyco International inherited a sliver stake in the company through its purchase of Amp Incorporated, a leading producer of electrical connectors. Individual backers are among the Who's Who of the business establishment. They include a former chairman of Morgan Stanley and a former president of PaineWebber. Board members include Dr. Shelby Brewer, a former top Department of Energy nuclear official, and Aris Melissaratos, former director of Westinghouse's Science and Technology Center.

So while BlackLight doesn't have the resources of the entire physics establishment, it has more pull than most start-ups. Its travails at the patent office have even attracted attention on Capitol Hill.

Responding to evidence presented by allies of BlackLight, senators Ron Wyden of Oregon and Max Cleland of Georgia say they want to know if an American Physical Society colleague of Park's at the State Department messed with Mills's application. One indication of outside influence noted by BlackLight attorney Jeffrey Melcher was that the patent office says it had lost the file when it ruled on the chemistry application. "That's not normal for an agency," says a Senate source. "If there's no record, how can you make a decision?"

The source says there may have been some improper contact by outside influences with patent officials, and points to Park's APS associate Dr. Peter Zimmerman, chief arms-control scientist at the State Department. Zimmerman boasted in an abstract for an upcoming APS lecture that "my own Department and the Patent Office have fought back with success" against "pseudoscientists," but didn't name his targets. His abstract railed against, among other things, inventors of "hydrinos."

A State Department official, who declined to be identified, said Zimmerman's abstract, which has since been removed, was missing a disclaimer explaining that he was speaking only as a private citizen. The official added that department employees are not allowed to use their titles outside of their official capacities. "The topic is totally outside our purview and mandate," the official said. "His views did not reflect those of the State Department."

Park and Zimmerman have certainly affected patent-office affairs before. Patent Examiner Tom Valone was invited by the State Department to organize an April 1999 Conference on Free Energy to explore alternatives to fossil fuels, many of which were controversial. Zimmerman told an APS gathering that Park asked him to put a stop to it.

"The week before I was to start [at the State Department] Bob [Park] sends me an e-mail, in which he tells me in some detail about the Conference on Free Energy under the sponsorship of the Secretary of State's Open Forum. It says, 'Pete, if you can't get that killed, what's the point of having you at the State Department?'"

PLASMA ENERGY AND HEALING

ALTERED STATES

Mind-Matter Interaction

Multivariate studies of mind-matter interaction in laboratory tasks, including study of mind in non-ordinary states of consciousness, and states of matter such as low-energy plasma, energy levels in atomic shells, background ionizing radiation, electronic noise, and growth of crystals in supersaturated solutions.

Mental States

Physical and psychophysiological correlates of anomalous states of consciousness, including states in which people report seeing apparitions and witnessing poltergeist phenomena. Early results of this project are described in an upcoming article entitled, "Are phantasms fact or fantasy? A preliminary investigation of apparitions evoked in the laboratory," in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research.

Psychological & Environmental Interactions

Interactions among consciousness and human performance in relationship to local, regional and global factors, including lunar, solar, geophysical, meteorological, and sociological indices.

Extended Perceptual Capabilities

Unconscious physiological indicators suggesting some form of extended perception of near-term, non-predictable futures. Another study is an experimental investigation of traditional remote healing rituals. This study examined physiological changes in a remote "healee" when a local "healer" attempted to heal them.

Mass Consciousness

Effects of group attention and mass "mental coherence" on the behavior of physical systems. The first phase of this study is described in a paper entitled, "Anomalous organization of random events by group consciousness," to be published soon in the Journal of Scientific Exploration.
